Technology businesses today are driven by data. With that comes the profound responsibility to protect your customers’ private information, to prevent the inadvertent transmission of computer viruses and to ensure that authorized users are able to securely access your website or computer network. The theft or misuse of private or confidential customer information occurs daily. Even though a company may not have done anything wrong, it may face suits from its customers.

What if that happened to you? Would you be prepared to face this on your own? If your only insurance coverage is a general liability policy, it’s likely you don’t have coverage for this type of loss.

These claim scenarios are hypothetical. Refer to the terms and conditions of the applicable policy and the actual facts of the claim to determine coverage.

Claim Scenario One: Your employee’s company laptop is stolen from his home. The laptop contains your customers’ private financial information. Your customers sue you for damages caused by your failure to protect their private financial information.

Claim Scenario Two: Your employee inadvertently downloads a destructive computer virus that spreads to other files housed on your computer network. Your client downloads information from your website, allowing the virus to spread to the client’s computer system and resulting in widespread loss of data and a computer network shutdown. Your client sues you, contending you should have prevented transmission of the virus. The client seeks damages for the lost data and economic loss caused by the network shutdown.

Result: In both cases, CyberFirst Network & Information Security Liability would be there to help because a network and information security wrongful act includes “failure to prevent unauthorized access to, or use of, data containing private or confidential information of others” and “failure to prevent the transmission of a computer virus.”

Network and information security liability coverage protects against risks associated with the failure to protect electronic data containing others’ private information, the inadvertent transmission of a computer virus, the inability of authorized users to access your website or computer network, and failure to notify individuals as required by any security breach notification law that applies.
Travelers has been a leading insurer of technology companies for more than 25 years. Our network and information security liability coverage helps protect you in every corner of the globe and at every business stage – from garage to greatness.

You can rest assured that if there’s a claim or suit brought against your company for a covered loss, you’ll have the support and legal representation you’ll need.

Network and information security liability coverage is specifically tailored for today’s high-tech companies. It protects your bottom line against damages that you must pay because of economic loss caused by the failure to prevent unauthorized access to, or use of, data containing private or confidential information, the failure to prevent the transmission of a computer virus, the failure to provide any authorized user of your website or network access, or the failure to notify individuals as required by any breach notification law that applies. Claims and suits for such damages – not covered under a commercial general liability policy – could be catastrophic.

The cost to defend any claim, even the most frivolous, can be financially devastating. Have you assessed your exposure to network and information security liability risks and the potential impact to your company?
