SPEAKER: Keeping on top of trucking compliance issues is no small task. For example, many trucking companies need to file proof of insurance with the state or federal government in order to maintain their operating authority. If that does not happen for some reason, the operating authority will be suspended.

Reinstatement can be time-consuming and costly, taking up to 48 hours to reactivate. And that means you are shut down and may need to hire some trucker to get your customers' cargo delivered. That's expensive for you, and it can create unhappy, even angry customers, who must deal with the fallout caused by late deliveries.

Northland understands the challenge, and can help ease your worries. We submit hundreds of motor carrier filings to state and federal authorities weekly. Based on the information you provide, Northland makes filings accurately, completely, and most importantly, timely.

In fact, if we receive this information by early afternoon, you can count on receiving your proof of insurance that same day. All at no cost to you. That might account for our 98% customer satisfaction rating for our filing service.

One in three transportation companies worry about compliance issues. If you're one of them, you can be confident that our knowledgeable staff, trucking expertise, and technology are just what you need. We know the industry. That's the Northland advantage.
