Travelers Institute

Katie Reilly is Director, Public Policy Initiatives, at the Travelers Institute, the public policy division of Travelers. The Travelers Institute was established as a means of participating in the public policy dialogue on matters of interest to the property casualty insurance sector, as well as the financial services industry more broadly. In her role at the Travelers Institute, Reilly brings together stakeholders from the public and private sectors to address a variety of topics. She has led initiatives focusing on distracted driving, cybersecurity, small business advocacy, and insurance education. Reilly is also a member of Travelers' Environmental, Social, and Governance Committee.

Prior to joining the Travelers Institute, Reilly worked at non-profit organizations, engaging corporate and government leaders to address global health issues and poverty in sub-Saharan Africa.

Reilly holds a Bachelors of Arts degree from Colby College and is pursuing her Masters of Public Administration from the University of Connecticut. She serves on the board of the Junior League of Hartford and lives in Connecticut with her husband and two children.
